20,000 JOBS AND COUNTING - STRUCTURAL ENGINEERS REACH MAJOR BUSINESS LANDMARK

A leading structural and civil engineering consultancy has reached a significant business landmark by completing its 20,000th project. Rhodes & Partners has worked its way through this huge number of commissions since being established in 1992, and the business is currently enjoying another period of growth and success.

The business, which also received the accolade of 'Property & Construction Business of the Year' at a recent awards ceremony, offers a wide range of professional services for both small domestic and large commercial projects, and Managing Director Nick Ribbeck cites this as a key factor in reaching this major landmark. "We have many different specialist skills and competences within the business, and that allows us to offer whatever services are required to arrive at an effective solution to a client's requirements," he explains.

"As you can imagine, the 20,000 jobs we've completed have included just about every type or project including domestic work, major commercial and residential developments, plus retail, leisure, education and healthcare buildings. We have certainly gained the experience that our clients demand of us, and that process has helped us grow from the small local practice which we began as, to the stage where we now operate on a far larger scale in terms of project size and geographical location.

"We also put considerable emphasis on training our engineers and providing them with the most appropriate modern technology, so we're also perfectly placed to tackle the next 20,000 projects!"
